Stuart Jenkins

Exploring precious metals natural qualities, and how it reacts to different techniques, has been the source for many of Stuarts' ideas. Letting the material have a life of its own, shapes and ideas can be suggested through the making process, and followed through to their natural conclusion. Contrast is used to create a visual palette, rough/smooth, texture/polished, black/white, the metal becomes a painterly/sculptural material. Hammer techniques prepare the section used, and shape the object, in which the surface retains all marks of the creative act. A simple hand raised bowl can become a document of its own making, not just a silhouette, but a vessel containing the energy used to create it.

Lisa Jones

Lisa is a printmaker working on fabric and paper. Designs are printed by hand onto natural fabrics: linen, cotton and more recently cork, combining subtle textures with a pop of neon colour.

Her range includes zipped cases, toiletry and project bags as well as planter pots, cushions and limited edition prints.

All pieces start from a hand drawn design, are printed, cut and then sewn by Lisa in her Kent based studio.

All printed using water-based 'eco' inks.

Commissions welcome.

Sabine Konig

Working from her studio in Kent, Sabine works mainly in silver and 18ct gold. Using large gemstones and pearls she designs unique pieces which are both striking and understated.

Apprentice trained in Germany using traditional techniques Sabine works mainly in silver, 18ct and 22ct gold.

Her love for vibrant large cabochons makes the majority of her pieces one-offs as the design evolves around the chosen stones.

By combining brushed silver with Freshwater and Tahitian Pearls Sabine creates classic pieces with a modern twist.

Sabine works from her studio on the North Kent Coast where she also welcomes clients to discuss commissions.

Olivia Schlevogt

Olivia's work is characterised by strong, clear and simple shapes, softened with a matt texture and surface detail. The geometric forms are made in gold or silver and detailed with fused yellow and white gold ornamentation, sometimes adding diamonds to highlight the design and including precious and semi-precious stones.

Olivia creates one off pieces or small collections of characteristic design and high quality work.

Olivia was born in South Germany where she completed a jewellery apprenticeship before continuing her training at the Kent Institute of Art and Design in Rochester and became self-employed in 1999.

She has won many prizes for design and craftsmanship and is now well established, with a workshop in Rochester where she teaches and works to commission and exhibits internationally.
